ELISA REINIKAINEN has a master's degree in nursing from Karolinska University. She is a registered specialist nurse in geriatric care and a Silvia Nurse. Throughout her professional journey, she has developed a deep commitment to improving the quality and conditions of care for older people. Her clinical experience, combined with many years of leadership in municipal healthcare, has shaped her interest in the complex responsibilities and challenges faced by those leading primary healthcare.

She currently works as Head of administration of the municipal department for elderly in Haninge municipality. Her research explores municipal chief nurses' experiences of fulfilling their patient safety responsibilities within municipal primary healthcare. With the aim to increase understanding of the conditions that shape the municipal chief nurses' role, and to contribute knowledge that may support the development of safer and more effective municipal primary healthcare.
